A SECRET SIN.

BY A. M. BELLERBY.

CHAPTER IV.

TURNING obstinately deaf ears to the representation of my mother and Rob, I determined to go immediately after the funeral to Linden court, the pretty estate my husband had so recently bought.
 They tried to make me go home, they tried to come with me, they said that Linden court might lapse to the crown.
 "I don't care," I answered, utterly regardless how disagreeable I made myself. "I want to be alone; and, considering how dearly I have bought my independence and everything else, I absolutely mean to have my own way."

So I had it, and went down by myself to Linden court, feeling my hard heart soften within me as I noticed how William Repton, in furnishing it, had remembered every whim and fancy of mine.

There was but one old thing in the house, a bureau of venerable but somewhat shaky appearance, which found a place in the library, looking shabby and out of place amid its modern surroundings.
 One wet day, which put a stop to my lonely exploration of the beauties surrounding Linden court, it occurred to me to turn out this bureau. The keys were thrown carelessly into a drawer, which seemed to augur that there was nothing particularly private in its contents.

There were a few photographs, some of popular actresses, others of people I knew nothing about.
 He had no relatives living so far as I had ever heard. They were none of my business nor any one's else now. I did not feel I had right or cause to open them, and restored them to their place.

In a secret drawer were other letters in faded ink, written on paper yellow with age, the records of an earlier generation; and amongst them were one or two miniatures, which I looked at with interest, then restored to their places in the bureau, and opened another drawer.

More of the dead man's letters!
 I began to get weary of my aimless search, and was about to replace them, when a separate envelope of peculiar size and shape slipped out from among them, and written on it my eyes caught the words:

"The last will and testament of me, William Repton," etc.

Hardly knowing what I was about, I broke the seal and feverishly examined the contents. It was informally drawn up, but to my ignorance, at least, seemed duly signed and attested by witnesses. Moreover, it was dated three years ago, before he had even met me, and it left all his real and personal effects to a distant cousin, of whom I had never so much as heard him speak—Godfrey Henry Cooper Knight.

I immediately remembered having seen this name written on one of the photographs, and turned to look among them again. Yes, there it was, the photo of a young and handsome man, with an autograph written in unusually clear characters. There was no mistaking Godfrey Henry Cooper Knight.

There had been some search made for a will, but the lawyer was quite certain his client had never made one. He had urged him to do so on his approaching marriage, he said; but Mr. Repton had answered that when he returned from his honeymoon it would be ample time, and he had objected to a marriage settlement.

I remembered all this now, while the conviction flashed across me that if the will I held in my hand were valid, all I had gone through would be in vain, and that instead of possessing half my dead husband's great wealth for the benefit of myself and my family, it would all go to this far-off and unknown cousin, Godfrey Knight.

In that blind moment I forgot that the jewels he had showered on me were alone worth thousands of pounds. I thought only of my mother's weak distress if the news reached her, of the difference it would make to the children's future.

"It would not be right, it would not be just!" I said passionately.
 "This was made before he knew me. He would wish me to have it, he loved me so. This will may be law, but it is not justice!"

I rose. I would not wait to hesitate nor think; but, taking both will and photograph, walked to the fire and watched consume and shrivel into the thin, useless ghosts of themselves.

Then I went back, locked the bureau, and threw the keys into the drawer whence I had taken them. But in the hour my secret sin was accomplished, retribution began.

I had secured wealth for my family and myself, but in securing it I had given power over myself to the torments of conscience.

I passed a wretched night, troubled by dreams in which I enacted the destruction of the will again and again, and was detected either by the coming to life of William Repton or by Godfrey Henry Cooper Knight, whose handsome face gave me no peace.

Even morning brought me no rest, and as soon as I had made a pretence of eating some breakfast I went again to the library, where I had ordered the fire to be already lit, driven by a new fear with which the dawn had scourged me, to see if amongst all those letters in the bureau mention might have been made of that will.

My conscience already made me a coward, for now I locked the door, and found myself glancing up, now and again, at the windows, fearing lest I should be watched.
 Two boys outside were mowing the lawn, and every time the whir of the machine came near I started like the guilty thing I was, and hardened myself against the feeling that only a few short hours ago had made me scruple to read the letters written to my dead husband; and all the while, though I could see nothing, a haunted feeling of being observed tormented me.

Better for me, better for the sacred memory of the dead, if those scruples had remained. In spite of my own sin, that glimpse into the private correspondence of the man who had married me taught me only too surely that my girlish instinct had been true, that to that man and his intimates life was a thing of pleasure and commerce; that nothing was worth having that money could not buy.
 Life to them was without elevation at refinement; self-indulgence was all in all.

In neither of them, however, was any mention of the will I had destroyed—not although two or three were signed G. H. C. Knight —not although the tenor of these showed that young man had evidently got into some wild scrape, for which he had had to pay a pretty heavy penalty. But that was long before—the last of the letters was seven years old.

Just as I was finishing my examination, which took nearly all the morning, the sound of carriage wheels on the drive made me hastily replace all the letters, throw the keys into the drawer, unlock the door, and settle myself in a chair with the first volume at hand, just before a servant came to announce that Miss Hurst had called to see me.

Fresh from my wrong doing, she was perhaps the very last person in the world I desired to see; but I nerved myself to meet her, and talked on indifferent topics for quite half an hour.

She was staying with some friends in the neighborhood, she said, and had taken the liberty of driving round to see how I was.

Not very cordially I asked her to stay to luncheon; but she declined on the plea that she had to interview a young lady, since she was in search of a companion.

"For I am getting up in years, my dear," she said, with her sweet voice, "and am needing fresh hands and feet and brains to supplement mine."

Then she rose to say good by,
 and, holding my hand in hers, said:

"Your emancipation has not meant happiness, to judge from your looks. Are you not lonely by yourself? Too much solitude is not good for any one."

"There is no such thing as happiness," I said vehemently. "All life is a mirage and a delusion." "No, my dear, it is not," she said firmly. "I have lived to three times your age, and amidst many sore troubles have known much happiness. You have not yet learned where to look for it."

So she went away, leaving me more miserable than ever. In the afternoon the weather cleared, and I started for a walk, but the beauty of the spring that had been so sweet to me the day before was robbed of all its loveliness.

A Profitable Investment.

"I was troubled for about seven years with my stomach and in bed half my time," says E. Demick, Somerville, Ind. "I spent about $1,000 and never could get any thing to help me until I tried Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. I have taken a few bottles and am entirely well." You don't live by what you eat, but by what you digest and assim-gest your food you are really starvthe stomach's work by digesting the food. You don't have to diet; eat all you want. Kodol Dyspep-

 F. A. WERMAN, OF BALTIMORE, SAYS:

Gentlemen:—Being entirely cured of deafness, thanks to your treatment, I will now give you a full history of my case, to be used at your discretion.
 About five years ago my right ear began to ring, and this kept on getting worse, until I lost my hearing in this ear entirely.
 I underwent a treatment for catarrh, for three months, without any success, consulted a number of physicians, among others, the most eminent ear specialist of this city, who told me that only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, that the head noises would then cease, but the hearing in the affected ear would be lost forever.
 I then saw your advertisement accidentally in a New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had used it only a few days according to your directions, the noises ceased, and to-day, after five weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain
